Call For Papers

Spring 2015 Princeton Theological Review Theme:
Church for the World: Essays in Honor of the Retirement of Darrell L. Guder

In honor of the retirement of Darrell L. Guder, the Henry Winters Luce Professor of Missional and Ecumenical Theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, the Princeton Theological Review is inviting submissions related to the theme of mission. All graduate students and early career scholars are invited to submit papers from various disciplinary perspectives (Ethics, Systematic or Historical Theology, Practical Theology, Church History, Biblical Studies, etc.) as it relates to this theme. We also invite interdisciplinary papers from other perspectives within the social sciences (anthropology, sociology, communication, etc.). There are two possible types of submissions: articles (4500-5000 words) and theological reflections (1250-1500) words.

To submit a paper, please email the full paper in Microsoft Word, along with the items listed below, to Christopher Waks at <ptr@ptsem.edu> by February 1st 2015.

This call for proposals seeks original contributions in all areas related to information and religion. Prospective participants are encouraged to submit abstracts that report on recent research and scholarship. Contributions to this call for papers should not have been previously published. There are no restrictions on research methodology.

The Princeton Theological Review is a student run, annual and online journal that exists to serve students within the Princeton Theological Seminary body as well as the wider theological community. We will provide a resource that, through a free and open exchange of ideas, challenges, informs and equips them to become more effective and faithful witnesses to the Lord Jesus Christ. It is committed to engaging theological issues in ways that are grounded in Scripture, centered on Jesus Christ, formed by the work of the Holy Spirit, and oriented toward the historic and contemporary reflections of the church.
